

The Wines of Luis Anxo

a true Spanish legend

Once renowned for world-class wines, Ribeiro was blighted by mildew, phylloxera and war in the early 20th century and native vines were largely replaced by high-yielding Palomino for bulk production. But in the 1980s a new wave of artisanal producers began to replant with local varieties on the brink of extinction like Treixadura, Brancellao and Ferrol.

Luis Anxo Rodriguez Vasquez has been a leader in this movement, tending to his six hectares by hand and quietly crafting gorgeous, stately wines. Galicia has been called "Spain's Burgundy" and the work of visionaries like Luis Anxo is elevating Ribeiro once again to the world stage.
